The Sponsor by [redacted]

One day, a really good soccer player called Zakaria signed for the best club in the world, Razors FC. He loved his new club. He was almost guaranteed to score a goal in every match, he was that good. One night, he was in his bedroom on his laptop when he searched up his club's sponsor, Entine Airways. When he searched it up he was speechless. They were racist. The airline didn't allow any black passengers or crew. Zakaria feared that the more he played, the more money would go to hurting people. Zakaria himself was from Nigeria. He wanted to leave the club but the club wouldn't leave him go since he was their best player. He told them to at least change their sponsor but they wouldn't budge. Then, an idea struck Zakaria. The next match, Zakaria brought black tape with him and covered the sponsor's logo that was on his shirt. His teammate asked what he was doing. Zakaria explained what the airline was doing. After listening to him, his teammate asked for the tape. He covered the logo too. Everyone including the substitutes covered the logo on their shirts. The team captain then announced that "We all are on the same team, we win, draw and lose together, even if it comes to something personal, we all help each other out." When they took of their jackets, everyone was shocked. After the match, the club owner agreed to terminate the contract with the sponsor and get a new sponsor. After a few days the airline collapsed since it wasn't getting enough payment anymore. Zakaria was delighted and the club thanked him for his actions. Zakaria won the Fair Play Award for his actions.

The End.
